Kinds of transcendental positions might lead to a four-colored map of the disparity between different ideas. \[\textit{Differentiation} \]

Hindu philosophy can be understood as a four-colored map of the disparity between different ideas.

The difference between the Hindu philosophy and the philosophy of the West may be seen in the following ways:

1. Hindu philosophy emphasizes the diversity of the human mind, whereas Western philosophy emphasizes the universality of the human mind.
2. Hindu philosophy focuses on the importance of personal experience, whereas Western philosophy focuses on the importance of reason and logic.
3. Hindu philosophy places a greater emphasis on the role of the individual in society, whereas Western philosophy places a greater emphasis on the role of society in shaping the individual.
4. Hindu philosophy is more likely to be seen as a way of life, whereas Western philosophy is more likely to be seen as a set of ideas.

The four-colored map of the disparity between different ideas may be seen as a way to understand the cultural differences between Hindu philosophy and Western philosophy.
